GOES TO PENITENTIARY FOR CHICKEN STEALING

Jacob Jackson, of State College, Confessed Guilt

9 MONTHS TO 3 YEARS

Aged John Murray, of Lemont, Who Accompanied Jackson, Related on Witness Stand Amazing Tale of Foraging Trip for Chickens.

On Thursday night of last week Lewis Marshall's shot gun came within an ace of bagging a chicken thief in his farm yard along Spring creek. The chicken thief sprinted to a waiting buggy, hopped aboard with several chickens and drove off at a lively pace. Marshall, not fully dressed, jumped into another buggy and with a loaded gun across his knee gave chase. The first buggy gave him the slip and he returned home after a fruitless drive to within one mile of State College.

Along about 6 o'clock Friday morning two men appeared at L. H. Gettig's butcher shop in Bellefonte and offered some chickens for sale. One of the men was Jacob Jackson, of State College, who has already figured in a number of escapades and who served time for larceny of some meat. The other man was John Murray, of Lemont, who is almost 77 years old. Murray did the dickering for the sale of the chickens, holding out for 11 cents a pound, instead of ten, the price offered by John Eckels who was in charge of the butcher shop. It seems that a short time before that Murray had inquired at the shop and had been informed that chickens were then bringing 11 cents. After a little discussion, Murray and Jackson let John Eckels have the chickens, receiving for them $6. Butcher Gettig an hour or two later sold the bunch to Nathan Hockman, the huckster, who in turn shipped them to Altoona.

That the chickens might have been stolen never occurred to Mr. Gettig or Mr. Hockman until Policemen Dukeman and Beezer walked into the story. A telegram to Altoona brought the chickens back to Bellefonte on the evening train. On Saturday afternoon Policeman Beezer and District Attorney Fortney started off in an automobile. Murray was arrested and gave bond for a hearing in Bellefonte on Monday. Jackson was found at the home of his brother, Elmer, near State College, arrested and brought to Bellefonte and lodged in jail. For a time it was a conundrum just who owned the chickens, which by that stage in the fowl drama were roosting in temporary quarters at Policeman Dukeman's home in Lamb Street.

On Monday morning the aged Mr. Murray "came across." To District Attorney Fortney he told everything, all of which he repeated under oath at the hearing held before Squire Brown later in the day.

Yesterday Jackson waived the finding of the Grand Jury, plead guilty and was sentenced by Judge Orvis to not more than 3 years or less than 9 months in the western penitentiary. Because of his age, and in consideration of his having told everything sentence may be suspended when Murray is called for trial at September Court.

Murray and Jackson drove to Bellefonte on Thursday, after hiring a horse from Liveryman Evey at State College, spent some time here and then started out on a wholesale forage for chickens. Murray sat in the buggy while Jackson jumped out at Lewis Marshall's, John Spearly's and one or two other farm houses up Spring creek. Each time Jackson would return to the buggy he would add several chickens to the rapidly increasing flock. It was a fine night for chickens.

Murray was considerably distressed when he arrived in Bellefonte on Monday for the hearing. Jackson, after a night or two in jail, appeared anything but disturbed as he sat in the Squire's office and faced Murray while the latter told his story. It developed that the little foraging expedition was carefully planned in advance, that in order to hire the horse and buggy Murray borrowed $2 or $2.50 from John Mitchell, of Lemont Arriving in Bellefonte they visited the Haag Hotel. Before very long they were on the road, their destination being any place with chickens and not too many cross dogs. Placed on the witness stand and told to tell his story in his own way, Murray said:

"We drove up past Wagner's mill, up Roopsburg, and then along a road until we came to some place where we stopped and Jackson got out. Pretty soon Jake came back and put some chickens in th buggy. We drove on a little and then stopped. Jake got out and went away and pretty soon he came back with some more chickens. Then we went on to a place, I think it was Marshall's place, and Jake he got out of the buggy. Before long he came back with I think three chickens. There were two shots. Jake jumped into the buggy and we drove off. We came back to Bellefonte and put up our horse at Thompson's livery. Then we went down to the butcher shop, Mr Gettig's shop, and there we sold the chickens."

"What did Jackson say about selling them?" queried the District Attorney. "Did he tell you to sell them?"

"Yes, Jake said I'd better sell them that Gettig might think there was some thing underhanded about the thing."

"How much did you get for the chickens?" asked the District Attorney.

"They weren't very big chickens" blandly replied Murray. "I don't think they weighed over four or five pounds a piece and there were about 60 pounds. We got $6 for them. Then we went up to the Haag House and had our breakfast. I had a $5 bill and a $1 bill, making the $6. I paid for our breakfast and told the fellow at the hotel to change the $5 bill so I could give Jake what was coming to him. He owed me a little bill and I kept that out."

"Ask him what I owed him any bill for?" broke in Jackson, who was seated a few feet away.

"You keep quiet," called out Squire Brown, addressing Jackson, who insisted on repeating the remark.

"You keep out of this just now, you're getting yours," interjected the District Attorney.

Murray related the story of the return trip home, saying that Jake was pretty drunk by the time he reached Elmer Jackson's home and stayed there. Elmer Jackson accompanied Murray to Lemont or State College and Murray returned the horse and buggy to the livery.

"Did you know when you started from home with the horse and buggy that you were going out for chickens?" asked the District Attorney.

"Not until we were starting out after coming to Bellefonte," replied Murray. "The places where we went were all strange to me. Jake said we'd go out and get a few chickens to sell."

When Murray was excused from the stand Jackson was sworn. He gave his name and address and then was asked what he had to say regarding Murray's statement. Jackson said:

"Its all about as Murray gave it, only I was drunk and didn't know where we were or what was going on. I was drunk in Bellefonte and drunk still when Fortney and Beezer got me."

Jackson then shifted the blame onto the aged Murray.

"Murray made the suggestion that we get some chickens and I was drunk and went along." said Jackson.

"Were these the first chickens you ever stole?" asked Squire Brown.

"Yes, sir," replied Jackson. "This is the first chicken case I ever had anything to do with."

"Weren't you ever arrested for larceny?" asked Squire Brown.

"Yes," answered Jackson, "but not for stealing chickens."

"You were arrested for stealing meat and served time?" asked Squire Brown.

"Yes, but I didn't steal the meat," was Jackson's reply.

"You say you were drunk when these chickens were stolen." remarked Squire Brown. "Were you too drunk to hear the two shots that were fired?"

"I didn't hear any shots," replied Jackson. "I guess I was too drunk to hear anything."

"Perhaps had the shots been a little lower you would have known more about the matter" volunteered Squire Brown.

"Maybe so," said Jackson.

Lewis Marshall, who was on hand to testify, was not called because his testimony was not considered necessary. Squire Brown held Jackson under $700 bond and Murray under $500 for September court. Murray's son went on his bond and he was let go. Jackson said he knew of nobody to go on his bond and he was returned to jail, finally pleading guilty and receiving sentence.

Mr. Marshall, after the hearing, said that on the night his chickens were stolen he saw the thief walk across the barn yard and that his son fired a shot gun after the rapidly disappearing figure. A slight delay in finding some shells probably saved the thief a dose of shot in his back, Mr. Marshall explained. The man with the chickens was not too drunk to run at breakneck speed, he said, or too drunk to drive so fast that not only the thieves but the chickens got away.

"A good many of my chickens have gone to State College," remarked Mr. Marshall. "A good many that Jake didn't take there."

"Jake never took any of your chickens to State College," spoke up Jackson, who had been an interested listener to what Mr. Marshall had said.

GALLANT OLD 45TH. IS DESCRIBED IN HISTORY

Members Prepare and Publish Interesting Volume.

FOUGHT UNDER BEAVER

Story of Part Played by Soldiers From Centre County Graphically Told and Illustrated With Pictures of Officers and Men.

A hasty reading of the "History of the Forty-Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry," just off the press, shows it to be a volume of great interest to our Centre County people. The interesting volume, as is noted on the fly-leaf, was "written by the Comrades," and edited and arranged by Allen D. Albert, private of Company D. To Squire W. H. Musser we are indebted for an opportunity to ramble through the pages, which not only tell the story of the gallant old Forty-fifth but are replete with photographs of officers and men who made up the command.

This regiment was organized in October 1861 with James A. Beaver as Lieutenant-Colonel. Other commissioned officers from this county were Theodore Gregg, Adjutant, George L. Potter, Surgeon, Theodore S. Christ, Assistant-Surgeon, and W. J. Gibson, Chaplain. Harvey M. Benner and Amos Mullen were also among the non-commissioned staff at the time of its organization. John I. Curtin was captain of Co. A, Austin Curtin Captain of Co. D, and Henry Stevens Captain of Co. E, while R. C. Cheeseman and C. T. Fryberger later won captains' commissions.

Among the non-commissioned company officers may be noted the names of John A. Daley, Matthew Riddle, A. T. Boggs, James I. Yarnell, John Irvin, William H. Musser, George W. Loner, W. H. Poorman, J. B. Merriman, J. R. Pheasant, J. G. Heberling and W. T. Fitzgerald. Many of the rank and file were enrolled from this county and the lists are full of the words "killed," "[illegible] some manner the extent [illegible] service.

The first chapter, written by General Beaver, is a very interesting account of the organization of the regiment and its initial military experience from the time when it left Harrisburg after receiving its state flag from the hands of Governor Curtin to join the Army of the Potomac. His narrative is full of incidents and is not confined alone to the recital of camp life. It ends with his transfer to the "One Hundred and Forty eighth," which took place on September 4th, 1862.

The History, which is written by seven of the survivors, is next continued by Sergeant Eugene Beauge in an account of the Regiment's South Carolina Campaign. Sergeant Beauge has compiled six of the twelve chapters of what makes up the actual history, the remaining portions consisting of short sketches and personal reminiscences by other members of the Regiment, together with certain hitherto unpublished letters and the Rosters of the companies, etc. The first set-to with the enemy, as set forth in this chapter, is supposed to be unwritten history and the Regiment suffered a loss of 15 killed and wounded.

The narration of the Maryland Campaign is next brought out by W. A. Roberts, a member of Co, K, whose two brothers, Albert and Edward, joined the regiment as drummers at the ages of 14 and 15 respectively. This includes the part taken in the battle of Antietam and part of an interesting letter written at that time showing how the soldiers were robbed by camp skulkers.

The battle of South Mountain is next described by Sergeant Beauge, in which Col. Welsh and his men, though sustaining the brunt of the fight along their position, were not given the credit they deserved. The writer quotes the official reports together with General McClellan's "Own Story" to show that his description is authoritative. Sergeant Beauge also continues the story of their campaigns in Kentucky and Mississippi. The Regiment traveled by rail as far as Nicholasville in Kentucky from which point they marched to the first Union camp to be established in that state. Near this camp, at Hustonville, notwithstanding the rumor that Morgan's guerrillas were in the neighborhood, a picnic was arranged at which dancing was the feature. About this time Curtin was promoted to the command of the Regiment and presented with a horse which afterwards carried him through the battles of the Wilderness. Their next move was northwest through Indiana to the Mississippi River and down the river in boats

HER SKULL FRACTURED DRIVING TO PICNIC

16-Years-Old Miriam Hazel Has Narrow Escape from Death.

HURLED AGAINST FENCE

Harness Broke Going Down Hill and Buggy Upset—Christian Hoy, Girl's Companion on Pleasure Trip, Escapes With Painful Bruises.

While driving from her home, in Bellefonte, to a picnic along Spring creek, Miriam, the 16-years-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hazel, was thrown from the buggy and sustained a fractured skull and other injuries. Her condition was extremely critical for a time, but it is now believed that she will recover. Christian Hoy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Siney Hoy, was also tossed from the buggy, fortunately escaping with painful bruises.

The accident happened shortly after 9 o'clock last Thursday morning. The horse, which young Hoy was driving, was going down hill when a holding-back strap broke. At the turn in the road the buggy upset. Miss Hazel was thrown out and pitched head foremost onto the ground. She was unconscious for several hours, only recovering sufficiently to recognize those about her after being removed to the hospital.

Her father, one of the firm of Hazel Bros., grocers, was at his store when a telephone message conveyed the news of the accident. With Mrs. Hazel he hurried in an automobile to the Hoy residence. A quick run was made to the hospital, Mr. Hazel holding his unconscious daughter in his arms. At the hospital everything possible was done to restore her to consciousness. After a time she regained her senses and in response to a question from Miss Beltz, the superintendent, she said she knew she was in the hospital.

An examination of her injuries revealed a [illegible] above the right ear and [illegible] and [illegible] been regaining strength and now the gratifying news comes from the hospital that her recovery is reasonably certain.

SUMMER SCHOOL ENDS

Bellefonte Teachers Delighted With Six Weeks Course at State.

The six weeks course summer school for teachers closed at State College last Friday and the Bellefonte contingent returned home expressing delight over their experience and the benefit derived. Figuratively and in fact, it was a case of the teachers, and not the scholars, going to school. There were upward of 400 teachers in attendance upon the summer school, representing not only Centre County but virtually all sections of the State. State College has any number of first class boarding houses, the campus is never more attractive than at this time of the year and with the work in the class rooms made as interesting as possible the several hundred teachers combined pleasure with study and greatly enjoyed their six weeks' visit.

For the most part the teachers elected to take up subjects for study directly in line with their daily work in their respective school rooms, the general plan of the summer school being to advance new ideas and new systems for the benefit of not only the scholar but also the teacher. One of the instructors, Miss Katherine C. Moran, who is in charge of teaching methods at the State Normal School, at Cortland, N. Y., has been selected to serve in a like capacity at the session next summer, thus testifying to the effective work accomplished by her this year. She is a lecturer before teachers' institutes who is in demand each year. Miss McGuire was an instructor in basketry and other domestic arts, and quite a large number of teachers availed themselves of the opportunity to attend her classes. Another instructor was Miss Fetterhoff, a State inspector of drawing. During the week there were splendid lectures by Dr. E. E. Sparks, president of State College; Prof. J. George Becht, State inspector of High Schools; Dean Weber, who was in general charge of the summer school; Rev. Dr. Russell H. Conwell, the noted Philadelphian, and others.

R. R. COMMISSION HERE

The State Railroad Commission on Friday of last week visited Bellefonte and conducted an investigation of a complaint filed by the Empire Lime Kilns against the Central Railroad Co. of Penna. Discrimination in the matter of shipping rates was set forth in the complaint filed at Harrisburg. A stenographic report of the proceedings here will be examined before the commission makes a report, which will be made public at Harrisburg.

The full commission was in attendance at the hearing, which was held at the Bush House. The commissioners were former Governor Samuel W. Pennypacker, M. J. Brecht and Nathaniel Ewing A. B. Miller, chief clerk of the commission, and John P. Dohoney, marshal, were also in attendance. Conrad Miller and John Mignot were present for the Empire Lime Kilns and submitted their case without the aid of counsel. Wallace H. Gephart, superintendent of the Central, with John Blanchard, as counsel, appeared for the railroad company. The case was gone into thoroughly, the hearing lasting several hours. The commission did not adjourn until almost 8 o'clock and departed from Bellefonte on the 8.30 o'clock train the same night.

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF 148TH

Will Celebrate Event in Bellefonte on Friday, September 6.

Plans are under way for a reunion in celebrating in fitting style the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the 148th Regiment, Penna. Vols. The celebration will be held in Bellefonte on Friday, September 6th. next. This date has been selected because the exact date of the organization falls on Sunday.

The call for the reunion sets forth that Bellefonte has been selected as the place because it is the "hub" around which the regiment revolved and from which the first companies left for camp in 1862. This urgent appeal to comrades to attend is embodied in the call:

"Comrades [illegible] all interested—all invited to make [illegible] effort of their lives to [illegible] which [illegible] from the [illegible] Indians and Jefferson will make a special effort to be present and join the comrades from Centre County in this celebration. To most of us it will be the last opportunity of meeting comrades of fifty years ago."

The committee in charge consists of Col. James A. Beaver, president; Amos Garbrick, D. W. Miller, W. A. Ishler, H. K. Miller, H. H. Montgomery, D. F. Fortney and D. W. Woodring, secretary.

DALE REUNION

Annual Family Gathering Held Last Saturday at Oak Hall.

A very interesting family reunion was held at Oak Hall on Saturday, August 3rd, when the descendents of the founder of the Dale family met in their annual gathering. By 10 o'clock a large number of Dale families, their friends and neighbors assembled in the Grange Hall, where they were called to order by A. W. Dale, the president of the association. An address of welcome, response, reading of the minutes, appointment of committees and general routine of business occupied the time until the noon hour, when all present repaired to the nearby grove where an elegant and sumptuous dinner had been provided. Everybody was invited to help themselves and we have the assurance that none went away hungry. In the afternoon another session was held in the Hall, when a regular program was taken up, consisting in reading of the family history by the historians of the association, speeches, recitations, music, etc. It was a day of unalloyed pleasure for all present, and when the assembled friends departed it was voted to have been one of the most successful reunions ever held by the association.

Found Valuable Pin.

Mary, a young daughter of William McClelland, of Lamb Street, about two weeks ago found a valuable scarf pin out near the big spring. She brought it to "The Republican" office naturally supposing it was the pin lost by a business man and advertised in our columns last week. The pin she found has a pearl center, surrounded by diamonds and is probably highly prized by the one who lost it and who will no doubt gladly reward the honest little girl who is waiting to turn it over.

John Colpetzer, of nearby Bellefonte, was a genial caller at our office a few days ago. He is thinking of locating at Danville.

ROOSEVELT NOMINATED ON THIRD PARTY TICKET

Governor Johnson, of California, His Running Mate

BOTH BY ACCLAMATION

Candidates Wildly Cheered When They Appeared in Convention Last Night and Accepted Nominations—Third Ticket in Penna.

The National Progressive Party, this week launched at Chicago, yesterday nominated Colonel Roosevelt for President and Governor Hiram Johnson, of California, for Vice-President. Both nominations were made by acclamation.

There was a slight delay when the convention opened for yesterday's session. This was due to some dissatisfaction upon the part of Colonel Roosevelt with the platform as prepared by the Resolutions Committee. Roosevelt insisted on a few changes, which were accordingly made.

It was well on toward the close of the afternoon session when nominations for President were reached. The only name to be presented was that of Roosevelt, no other person being even under consideration for first place on the Bull Moose ticket. It was 5:38 when a motion to nominate the Colonel by acclamation was offered and instantly the convention was in a tumult of enthusiasm. Wildly applauding delegates and cheering crowds of spectators in the galleries seconded the motion and it was adopted with a mighty chorus of "ayes."

The nomination of Governor Johnson for Vice-President was also made without opposition, although there were some who favored the selection of a southern Democrat as Roosevelt's running-mate. There were numerous seconding speeches and when the motion was made to nominate him by acclamation it was carried with a whoop.

At 6:25 o'clock Colonel Roosevelt and Governor Johnson proceeded to the convention hall to deliver their speeches of acceptance. Their appearance on the platform was the signal for a tremendous ovation, which they acknowledged by bowing and smiling. During his speech to the convention Colonel Roosevelt was frequently interrupted with applause and at times the demonstration became so noisy that it was with difficulty that he could make himself heard. He thanked the [illegible] for [illegible] nomination to [illegible] from now [illegible] the people [illegible] movement [illegible] but would [illegible] steadily [illegible] victory." Colonel Roosevelt declared that the platform as adopted met his full and hearty approval and that it embodied the issues upon which the new party would stand or fall.

The Pennsylvania delegation took an active part in not only the convention proceedings but also in the preliminaries. For the most part the Pennsylvania delegation was made up of the same men who went to Chicago as delegates to the Taft convention.

Prior to the convention Colonel Roosevelt announced that as a result of conferences held by him with Pennsylvania leaders it had been decided to place a third party ticket in the field in this State and to sever all connection with the Republican ticket. Roosevelt sympathizers chosen as electors on the Taft ticket in this State, Colonel Roosevelt said, will withdraw and go on the Roosevelt ticket, which in this State will have its official place in what is to be known as the Washington Party column. The Pennsylvania Roosevelt leaders claim control of the party machinery and have volunteered the information that they will put up Senator Penrose and other pronounced Taft men as electors in the Taft column. It is said that this plan was first submitted to Roosevelt and approved by him, the purpose being to center the attack on the Taft leaders in Pennsylvania and with Roosevelt personally leading the attack.

WASHINGTON PARTY

Roosevelt Forces in Pennsylvania Adopt This Name in All Counties.

The Roosevelt people in Pennsylvania have pre-empted title to the Washington Party and under this name will make their campaign with State and local candidates. They had planned using the title Progressive Party, but the name had previously been taken up by Republicans or Democrats in a number of counties, so the name Washington Party was chosen. In order to secure title in Centre County signers to a petition were secured here and the affidavits filed at Harrisburg together with those from other counties.

Thus far no announcement has been made as to who will lead the campaign in Centre County for the Roosevelt, or Washington Party ticket. It is understood that a Roosevelt candidate will be put in the field for Assembly in the county, opposing both C. L. Gramley, Republican nominee, and R. M. Foster, named on the Democratic ticket at the recent primaries.

It is reported that Theodore D. Boal, of Boalsburg, will be entered as the Roosevelt candidate for Congress in this district. Confirmation of this report could not be had, Mr. Boal being out of town this week.

He had been in failing health for quite a while and his death was not wholly unexpected, although to those who knew him well it caused the deepest sorrow. He was a man who led a good life, always endeavoring to be scrupulously fair in his dealings with others. He was a kind father and a devoted husband and was especially well liked in the community in which he made his home for many years. A Woman and a Tiger.

Although the tiger usually does its hunting at night, it departs at times from this habit, especially if it happens to be a man eater. In the province of Nam, in the northern part of Siam, a villager and his wife were gathering wood one afternoon in the jungle. Suddenly a tiger leaped on the man, seized him by the ankle, threw him over its back and made for the woods. The wife, mad with grief and excitement, followed. After going perhaps 200 yards the tiger stopped, dropped its victim and began to play with him precisely as a cat plays with a mouse. The woman, armed only with a stout bamboo club, stole up behind the beast and smote it on the neck. By great good luck she broke two of the vertebrae and killed the animal instantly. Then she dragged her senseless husband back to their hut and called the neighbors. The man, although badly mauled, finally recovered. In token of admiration for the woman's bravery the chao phya, or governor of the province, gave her a life pension and a silver medal.—Youth's Companion.

Hotel Lobby Ghosts.

Drowsing in a hotel lobby on a balmy afternoon were some fifty men in different stages of somnolence. Presently a bellboy passed shouting:

"Mr. Zachary Taylor. Mr. Zachary Taylor, please."

The name made everybody sit up.

"Zachary Taylor?" said a smooth faced youth. "That name sounds familiar."

"Familiar?" snorted the graybeard beside him. "Good Lord!"

Then Zachary Taylor appeared. He was a dapper little fellow known to nobody there except a personal friend who had wanted him paged, yet he had attracted as much attention as royalty.

"Scenes like that are common in hotel lobbies," said a clerk. "Nearly every day some name once famous is paged in New York hotels. Of course the boy is not trying to call from the grave the original possessor of the great name, but the loungers in the lobby show almost as much interest as if he were."—Washington Star.

Expert Wine Drinkers.

An Algerian regiment will empty as many as a thousand pitchers of wine without losing half a thimbleful of liquor. It is a system which permits a general use of one vessel for drinking purposes in an absolutely cleanly way. It dispenses with cups or glasses, a great convenience when troops are on active service. A large pitcher with a spout to it, filled with wine, was passed from hand to hand. Each soldier lifted the pitcher high over his head and tilted it until the wine poured in a steady stream into his open mouth below. When the wine splashed inside the drinker's stomach for about a minute the soldier soldier next him took possession of the pitcher and repeated the performance. Not a drop was wasted.

Reporters' Blunders.

Addressing a London audience, Lord Tweedmouth, in reviewing the Marquis of Salisbury's foreign policy, quoted Bismarck's famous description of the marquis, "A lath painted to look like iron." Perhaps it was Lord Tweedmouth's enunciation that caused the mistake. Anyhow, the reporter wrote that Lord Tweedmouth went on to criticise the foreign policy of the government and described the Marquis of Salisbury as a lark painted to look like a lion!

Mr. Chamberlain was the victim on another occasion of a somewhat amazing error of a similar order. He had alluded to the Figaro of Beaumarchais, but the last word was transformed when it appeared in print into "Jean Marche."

When, again, Lord Salisbury quoted Lord Morley's famous phrase, "marricles and Manitoba," in which he summed up what appeared then to be the Unionist policy for Ireland, the expression came out in print as "manacles and men at the bar."—Pearson's.

Ducks and Water.

Many things are said to be as natural as ducks taking to water, but a French writer tells of ducks that hated water. There were three of them, and they had lived some years in Paris, where they had their daily bath in a small basin. Their owner finally took them to the country to live beside a fine lake. He was surprised at putting them into the lake to see them instantly scramble ashore and waddle to a neighboring stable, whence they never came out except to feed. Never could they be induced to remain in the water save by force or fear, and when there they always drew closely together, so as to occupy no more space than their bath basin in Paris. They were thoroughly afraid of the lake, and they never became used to it.

Feminine Mind.

They lived in a little town [illegible] Now," said he, "the committee is offering a prize for the prettiest lawn."

"What is that to me?"

"Why don't you enter the contest?"

"You know I haven't had a lawn in five years. I haven't even a gingham that is fit to wear."

Moral.—You can't take their minds off the subject of dress.—Pittsburgh Post.

Caesar's Appearance.

Julius Caesar was a thin man, tall and with a very wrinkled, seamy countenance. His forehead was broad and full of wrinkles. His eyes were not large, but described as exceedingly bright and quick. His nose was of more than usual size and his chin full and prominent. He walked with a slight, scholarly stoop in his shoulders. His ears stood out well from his head, and his hair was always cut close. Early in life he became bald.

Heart and Lungs.

The action of the heart, lungs and digestive system is involuntary, for the reason that it is indispensable to life and must be carried on under all circumstances. If a man had to think of his heart or had to remember that he must breathe or that his food must digest he would have no time to do anything else, and if by chance he should forget to keep his heart going or his lungs in operation he would fall dead on the spot.

Most Important Event.

"What do you consider the most important event in the history of Paris?"

"Well," replied the tourist who had grown weary of distributing tips, "so far as financial prosperity is concerned, I should say the discovery of America was the making of this town."—Washington Herald.

Good News.

Cashier—Have you heard, sir, that John Jones is a bankrupt? Banker—Well, that's good news. We will now get a little of what he owes us, whereas, if he had remained in business, we never would have got a cent.—Fliegende Blatter.

An Egotist.

Tommy—Pop, what is an egotist? Tommy Pop—An egotist, my son, is a man who thinks he can form an impartial opinion of himself.—Philadelphia Record.

A High Testimonial.

Lady (engaging a maid)—Was your last mistress satisfied with you? Maid—Well, mum, she said she was very pleased when I left.

Many a man's vices have at first been nothing worse than good qualities run wild.—Hare.

Tennyson on Poetry.

Tennyson regarded as "almost the grandest line in the English language" Wordsworth's

Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns.

Among "the most liquid lines of any language" he set Gray's

And drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds.

From Shakespeare this was one of his favorites for its Aeschylean qualities:

The burning crest
Of the old, feeble and day wearied sun.

"Hamlet" he regarded as "the greatest creation in literature." Poe was his choice of the American poets. "I know several striking poems by American poets," he once said. Was there ever fainter praise? Seven of his own best songs he thought were "All Along the Valley," "Courage, Poor Heart of Stone," "Break, Break, Break," "The Bugle Song," "Ask Me No More," "Tears, Idle Tears" and "Crossing the Bar."—Kansas City Times.

The Best Court of Appeal.

No one could say a sharp or bitter thing with more absolute coolness than Lord Westbury, who was made lord chancellor of England in 1861.

After retiring from the office of lord chancellor he took a very active part in the house of lords, sitting as a court of appeals, where his colleagues were Lord Chelmsford and Lord Colonsay. Lord St. Leonards, who was senior to them all, never attended. One day Lord Westbury chanced to meet him and said, "My dear St. Leonards, why don't you come and give us your valuable assistance in the house of lords?"

"Ah," said Lord St. Leonards, "I should be of no use. I am old and blind and stupid."

"My dear lord," said Westbury, "that does not signify in the least. I am old, Chelmsford is blind, and Colonsay is stupid, yet we make the very best court of appeals which has ever sat in that assembly."

Corsica and England.

It is an almost forgotten fact that for a period of a little more than two years during the Napoleonic wars Corsica was a British possession. After the evacuation of Toulon the British government felt it necessary to take the island, and Lord Hood, with Nelson as brigadier, was sent to drive out the French. With the capture of Calvi, July 12, 1794, where Nelson lost his eye, the island fell into British hands, and George III. formally accepted the crown of Corsica, appointing Sir George Elliot as British viceroy and allowing the Corsicans to retain their legislative assembly. In 1796 the activity of the French navy in other parts of the Mediterranean resulted in a sudden decision of the British government to withdraw from the island. The evacuation was completed on Oct. 26 of that year, and Corsica reverted to France.

[illegible] scene ever witnessed in Westminster hall was that trial in Henry VIII.'s reign when 480 men and 11 women appeared before the king and some of his great nobles with ropes around their necks on a charge of being concerned in the rising of the prentices on the previous May day. Fortunately they had good friends in three queens—Katherine, Mary of France and Margaret of Scotland—who begged for their pardon on their knees, and when Henry at last yielded to such supplications the prisoners, it is said, "gave a mighty shout for joy, throwing their halters toward the top of the hall." The stage has never produced anything to rival that dramatic moment.—London Graphic.

The Seven British Languages.

There are seven distinct languages spoken in the British Isles. In addition to English there are Welsh in Wales, Erse in Ireland, Manx in the Isle of Man—church services in Manx were discontinued there but recently—Gaelic in Scotland, French in the Channel islands and Cornish was spoken in Cornwall more recently than either historians or the public know.—London Globe.

She Wanted Eggs.

Hungry Girl (one of a party of tourists who have arrived late at a country inn)—No fresh eggs? But you've got hens, haven't you? Innkeeper's Wife—Yes, but they're all asleep. Hungry Girl—Well, but can't you wake them?—Fliegende Blatter.

Made Him Sad.

"Wot's de matter wit' Mooney Waggles?"

"Aw, don't notice him. He thinks he sees things."

"Wot kind o things?"

"Aw, stacks o soap an loads o bathtubs."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Suggestion.

Doctor (to pressing creditor)—If you must bring your bill every day, at least you might come with your head tied up, so that people would think you were a patient.

Wise Daughter.

Father—If you paid more attention to cooking and less to dress, my dear, you would make a much better wife. Daughter—Yes, father. But who would marry me?

Value of Massage.

The value of massage properly administered is coming to be generally recognized by the medical profession in many ailments. In local congestion the overtension of the vessels can often be relaxed, thus bringing to the sufferer a relief which, not forthcoming, would allow the ailment to progress to a protracted or deep seated disorder. The New York Medical Journal, concerning the benefits to be derived from massage treatment, says that in acute colds in the head strong finger pressure along the upper portion of the spine on either side will open up the nose passages on the corresponding side. Masseurs usually rub well on both sides of the spine. Fever headaches or congestion of the head, are readily relieved by slow, distributed pressure on the nerves at the back of the head and along the upper vertebrae. Acute fevers, accompanied by congestion swollen veins, dry skin, are relieved by gentle pressure along the back muscles, this treatment being intended to facilitate perspiration and to quiet the nerves.

Barrie's Favorite Name.

Of women's names that of Margaret occurs most often in the works of J. M. Barrie. There was a Margaret in "The Little Minister," in "Quality Street," in "The Admirable Crichton," and Margaret, called "Maggie" Wylie was the heroine of "What Every Woman Knows." The name to Mr. Barrie sums up everything that is tender, simple, noble and true in fine womanhood. And why not? Margaret Ogilvy was the maiden name of James Matthew Barrie's mother. And surely it was of his mother, Margaret Barrie, that the playwright was thinking when he wrote these lines descriptive of Margaret Darling, mother of Wendy in "Peter Pan:"

"She was a lovely lady, with a romantic mind and such a sweet, mocking mouth. Her romantic mind was like the little boxes one within the other that come from the puzzling east. However many you discover there is always one more."

A Famous Beauty.

Mme. de Remusat had features so perfect that her contemporaries said she was worthy to sit as a model for a Greek goddess. The flesh of her face closely resembled alabaster, and yet she was not pale and did not give the impression of being in delicate health. Her beauty attracted universal attention to her, no matter where she went, and even in old age she retained most of her good looks.

Quite Apparent.

She—You know, judge, our characters are different, and I don't want to be in his way— He—Yes, your honor, she is peculiar, and I don't want to interfere— Judge—I understand. You ask for a divorce out of pure love.—Meggendorfer Blatter.

Poor Fellow!

Hewitt—He is very absentminded. Jewett—Yes; if he were to get married and a woman were to take his name he would think he didn't have any left.—New York Press.

Well Trained.

"That fellow Binks is a mighty good listener. He hardly ever says a word. Why is it? Modesty?" "No. Matrimony."—Laughter.

Ah, if men but knew in what a small dwelling Joy can live and how little it costs to furnish it.—Souvenirs.

A JOINT RESOLUTION

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in General Assembly met, That the following is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the eighteenth article thereof:—

Article IX.

Section 15. No obligations which have been heretofore issued, or which may hereafter be issued, by any county or municipality, other than Philadelphia, to provide for the construction or acquisition of waterworks, subways, underground railways or street railways, or the appurtenances thereof, shall be considered as a debt if a municipality, within the meaning of section eight of article nine of the Constitution of Pennsylvania or of this amendment, if the net revenue derived from said property for a period of five years, either before or after the acquisition thereof, or, where the same is constructed by the county or municipality, after the completion thereof, shall have been sufficient to pay interest and sinking-fund charges during said period upon said obligations, or if the said obligations shall be secured by liens upon the respective properties, and shall impose no municipal liability. Height of Diplomacy.

It was at the British embassy at Washington. A distinguished English man was delivering a lecture, and in his audience were many big diplomats and high society people. Just as the lecturer spreadeon the ambient atmosphere his most gorgeous verbal picture a large German tried to sit down quietly in a chair. He did sit down, achieving a transfer from the chair to the floor with a great clatter, which peered the lecturer and annoyed the guests. Everybody in the room turned around and glared in the direction from which the noise had come. But that German was too smart for them. Having buried himself against the floor he stayed there, breathing a fine mixture of wax and meal, which had been rubbed in preparatory to the dancing that was to come later.

After the lecture was over Mr. Bryce, the British ambassador, found and shook hands with the astute German, remarking:

"Your fall and subsequent recumbent position were the most exquisite piece of diplomacy I ever saw in Washington."—Popular Magazine.

Discovered Through Chance.

By mere chance Professor Roentgen suspended a Crookes tube, through which an electric glow was playing, over a table that had a package of photographic plates in a drawer underneath. On the table happened to lie a bunch of keys. When the plates were taken out to be used they were found to be impressed with shadowy images of the keys. So the wonderful X rays were discovered. In this case, too, a frog chanced to play an interesting part. One was put, with other objects on the table in order to get a shadow photograph on a plate in the drawer, and when the photograph was developed the skeleton of the frog was revealed in the picture. Thus it was learned that X ray photography could be employed to picture the internal parts of living animals.—New York Journal.

Call Us North Americans.

An Argentina peculiarity, noticeable also in Chile, is that many of the citizens begrudge our monopoly of the title of "Americans." They catalogue us at all possible times under "N" instead of "A." They speak of us as North Americans or as "Yankis" and call our minister the "North American minister," quite ignoring Mexico and Canada. Certain Americans desirous of securing an increase of our trade with South America and of placating in every possible manner the South Americans, overlooking the practical side of the question, have acquiesced in the local prejudice and speak of themselves as North Americans, even though they do not address their letters to the "United States of North America."—Detroit Free Press.

A Treasure.

When Lincoln was practicing law a client came to him and wanted to know if something couldn't be done to protect him from his wife. He said she locked him out nights and threw dishes at him and battered him up with a club. She scolded him day and night and consistently and continuously made life miserable for him.

"Have you thought of getting a divorce?" inquired Lincoln.

"No, no; I don't want a divorce. Why, I wouldn't leave th' old woman for anything."

"You wouldn't! After all that abuse? And why not?"

"Because, squire, that old woman of mine can make the best flapjacks in Sangamon county."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Dilatory Painter.

One of the characteristics of Sir Thomas Lawrence, the portrait painter, was dilatoriness. "Lord Normanton," says a writer, "must have had the patience of a Job wedded to the politeness of a Grandison, for, although in 1818 Lady Normanton had already been sitting off and on for three years, I find him still in 1824 discussing in the politest manner what the background of her ladyship's picture shall be and only venturing in the mildest way to remind Sir Thomas that he had also himself been sitting to him ever since the year 1815!" The portrait was delivered in 1827.

Odd Marriage Belief.

An unmarried man or woman of marriageable age is something that is rarely seen in the Fiji islands. The reason of this is not far to seek. The natives believe that if a person dies while in an unmarried state his or her soul is doomed to wander about through endless ages of eternity in an intermediate region between heaven and hades. At the end of each moon they are allowed to look into heaven, but are never permitted to enter.

Fielding and Batting.

"What do you think of Fielding?" asked a young lady of a graduate of one of our universities with whom she had been talking about the early English novelists.

"Oh," was the answer, "it's important, of course, but it isn't worth much unless there is good batting."

Showing Off the Author.

One day the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, in a tramp through Cornwall, came to a little village in which a tea meeting was going on. Mr Pearse entered the little chapel and joined in the tea. He was in the most unclerical of costumes, which was an act of sense on his part, but during the progress of tea one or two of the "leaders" managed to recognize him, whereupon one of them approached him and said in an anxious whisper:

"Be you the Rev. Mark Guy Pearse?"

"Yes—I be," he answered.

"I thought as how you was. Now, do you see, we want to raise a little money, and a thought have struck us. Do 'ee just come out quiet like and say nothing to nobody, and then we will put 'ee in the vestry, and we will go into the chapel and say, 'The Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, author of "Daniel Quorum," is in the vestry and can be seed at threepence each, the proceeds to go for the good of the cause."—London Answers.

The Top Hat In Sculpture.

The statue of Alfred de Musset, placed some years ago at Neuilly, just outside the Porte Maillot (Paris), represents the poet in the outdoor costume of his epoch, holding a silk hat in one hand. Personally I infinitely prefer this "dandy Musset" to the huge and cumbersome group outside the Comedie Francaise or the enormous composition in relief on the Cours-la-Reine. Musset is perhaps the only individual—certainly the only poet—who has three statues in Paris. The most remarkable effort in this line which I have noticed is the large equestrian statue of Mr. Sawbridge in front of the principal entrance to Olantigh towers, near Wye, Kent. I fancy he was a lord mayor, and, seated on a prancing steed, he is holding an early Victorian top hat about eighteen inches in front of his brow. A tight frock coat completes the tout ensemble.—London Notes and Queries.

One Didn't Count.

A local official, at a dinner in Philadelphia, praised the Quaker City ardently.

"I must even praise," he said with a smile, "our exclusiveness—we carry it so far, you know. Birth is not enough with us; residence is equally important, and they who live above Market street are doomed. Here, surely, is exclusiveness with a vengeance.

"They tell a story about a dinner in Rittenhouse square. At this dinner, as the fish course began, one woman whispered to another:

"'Dear me, there are thirteen at table.'

"But the other woman smiled and answered calmly:

"'Compose yourself, my dear Mrs. Cadbiddieder Waddle. Mrs. North-Broad is not really one of us. She lives uptown, you know.'"—Exchange.

A Hostess and an Emergency.

Lady K. had sent Parnell an invitation to dinner, but Charles, who was very absentminded with respect to social functions and unconventional in the extreme, had forgotten the right date of the party. He therefore turned up a couple of evenings afterward an hour before the time. Lady K., glad to have him on any terms, did not undeceive him as to his error, but hastily sent off several notes explaining the situation and asking some of her most intimate friends to help her in her emergency. She also ordered a hastily improvised dinner from a neighboring caterer's.—"Life of Parnell."

A Natural Query.

The late General F. D. Grant, when discussing military neatness, used often to tell a story about his father.

"My father was talking to General Sherman in his tent one day," he would begin, "when a third general entered, a brigadier notorious for his slovenliness. After the brigadier left my father blew forth a cloud of smoke and said:

"'Sherman, I wonder whom that man gets to wear his shirts the first week?'"

Naming a Book.

It is not generally known how Kipling chose the title "The Light That Failed" for the book that helped to make him famous. He had almost decided to call the novel "The Failure," although he was somewhat dissatisfied with this rather prosaic title. One evening as he was sitting in his study reading by lamplight the light went down suddenly, when Kipling exclaimed:

"By Jove, I've got it! 'The Light That Failed!'"

Gilded Pets.

"Riches," said the ready made philosopher, "have wings, disturb our rest and require constant care."

"I suppose so," replied Mr. Dustin Stax, "but human nature is human nature, and we will keep on wanting dollars the same as women want dogs and canary birds."—Washington Star.

A Man of His Word.

"Wess, old man, did Binks keep his word and share his last dollar with you?" asked Hodgkins.

"Yes," sighed Downanout. "He did, but he'd made the same promise to twenty others, and all I got was a nickel."—Harper's.

The hot air stage is here — and, unfortunately, to remain until election dry.

A news despatch says that Bryan is going on the trail after Roos velt and follow him over the country. Sort of a case of the red rag following the bull.

In the event Woodrow Wilson is elected President William Jennings Bryan is to become Secretary of the Treasury. And then sooner or later, Mr. Bryan will work in his 16 to 1.

The third party managers in Pennsylvania have adopted the name Washington Party. George's name, like that of reform, is not infrequently found in strange company. Anyhow, George himself never had any use for third parties.

Governor Wilson as a southerner may sympathize with the boys who wore the blue and who now depend on the little pensions they receive and which they so richly deserve. Governor Wilson, as we say, may be full of sympathy for the northern soldier, but at best it would be an experiment. There is no uncertainty about it while the soldiers' pensions are in the hands of President Taft.

Governor Wilson is in a rage because the newspapers published a comment by him that tobacco chewers are the best thinkers. The Governor so expressed himself in trying to toss a little boquet to the farmer. He happened to have the city man's mistaken idea that our farmers make a daily practice of loanfig in country stores, chew tobacco and settle the fate of the nation. When he saw that his boquet-to-be proved to be without either fragrance or beauty Governor Wilson jumped into a frenzy and denounced the newspapers for publishing what he said. The one significant thing about the Governor's little predicament is that it revealed his true conception of how the farmer puts in his time. If the Governor were to take the trouble to find out he would learn that Centre County farmers put in their time attending to their own business, to trying to rear and educate their families and lay away something for a rainy day in order that they need not ask a private pension from the Carnegie Commission. So far as saving the nation is concerned Governor Wilson would learn that our farmers leave that to so-called statesmen who aspire to high honors regardless of qualification or merit.

KEEP COOL.

It is just thirteen weeks until the election. One needs but to look ahead a little to see in store all kinds of skirmishes, oral and physical, some sensible but mostly foolish. Some men who are friends today will be mortal enemies before the polls close in November. Politics is the one thing in the world which makes some persons so confoundedly hot under the collar that they believe all who disagree with them to be not only dead wrong but fit subjects for the asylum. The strange part about it is that these very same men seldom if ever lose their heads in managing their own business. A hot political argument around the corner is sometimes followed by an all-around kick about the dinner and things in general at home and the upshot of it is that everybody becomes unhappy.

A hot political argument is what might be termed campaignitis, a disease prevalent in most communities along about this time of the year. There is a cure for it. Keep cool.

THE THIRD PARTY.

In Chicago this week the Roosevelt forces have launched their third party movement, presenting their own candidates for President and Vice President. By this action they absolutely and voluntarily divorce themselves from the three old parties. They make it known that they have nothing in common with the Republicans, the Democrats or the Prohibitionists. The doctrinê of the new party is that it alone is in the right and that all other parties are in the wrong.

The spirit of the Chicago convention should prevail in conducting the Roosevelt campaign in Pennsylvania. The Roosevelt and the Taft tickets should be separate and apart, one from the other. Taft men should have the right to cast their votes for a distinctively Taft ticket. Roosevelt men should be able to vote for their own ticket of Roosevelt candidates. The voice of the majorty should prevail. If the friends of Taft are in the majority then he is entitled to Pennsylvania's vote in the electoral college. If Roosevelt followers outnumber those of Taft at the polls then Roosevelt should receive the electoral vote. A confusion of tickets is contrary to the intent of our election laws.

Colonel Roosevelt on Monday predicted at Chicago that at the end of six weeks the Republican ticket will not be heard of. We do not agree with him. However, willing always to concede two sides to all questions, we cheerfully note the date he has fixed to mark the complete disappearance of the party which honored him with an election as Governor of New York, then as Vice President and finally as President. September 16 will be exactly six weeks from the day Colonel Roosevelt uttered his dire prediction. Perhaps he is right about it. On the other hand, it is just barely possible that for once in his life he will be mistaken.

FARMER'S SUDDEN DEATH

Emanuel Garbrick, a well known retired farmer, died quite suddenly at his late home at Zion on Tuesday night. He had been in Bellefonte during the afternoon. About 9 o'clock that night he suffered a stroke of heart failure and passed away about 11.45 o'clock. Funeral services will be held on Saturday morning, interment to be at Zion.

Deceased was aged about 66 years and was actively engaged in farming virtually all his life. In more recent years he made his home in Zion. He had been troubled more or less with weakness of the heart for some time past. He appeared to be as well as usual while in Bellefonte on Tuesday and the news of his death was a great surprise to his friends.

Surviving the deceased are a widow and these daughters: Mrs. William Corman, Mrs. Samuel Clevenstine, Mrs. Merrill Kerstetter, Annie and Minnie, at home. One sister and one brother also survive: Mrs. John Ishler, of State College, and Jacob Garbrick, of Bellefonte.

Joseph Davidson Dead.

After an illness of about five months the venerable Joseph Davidson died on Friday morning, last, at his late home near Runville. Funeral services were held on Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, interment being made in the Stover cemetery. Deceased was aged 70 years, 1 month and 20 days. He was well and favorably known in the community in which he lived and was for years a member of the Methodist Episcopal church of Unionville. Surviving to mourn his passing away are his widow, who is in feeble health, and these children: James, of Runville; Blanche, at home; Mrs. Robert (Sarah) Estep, of Osceola; Mrs. William (Anna) Lowery, Mrs. George (Mary) Reickard, of Altoona; Mrs. A. T. (Adeline) Woodring, of Osceola, and Willis, Helen and Bertha, at home.

William Spicer Dead.

William Spicer died at his late home at Gum Stump at 2.30 o'clock on Thursday morning of last week. He had been in failing health for about one year, suffering from cancer of the stomach. Funeral services were held on Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, conducted by Revs. Murtoff, of Snow Shoe, and Colledge and Dean of Runville. Interment was made in the Advent cemetery. Surviving the deceased are his widow and these children: Thomas, of WarriorsMark; Mrs. E. S. Bennett and Mrs. Bella Johnson, of Runville; Roland and Toner, of Bellefonte; Edward, of Unionville, and Clarence and Mabel, at home. Four brothers and one sister also survive: George, of Bellefonte; Robert, of Milesburg; John, of Holt Hollow; Andrew, of Valley View, and Mrs. Jane Summers, of Snow Shoe Intersection.

Isaac A. Shawver, the popular hotel proprietor at Millheim, with Mrs. Shawver, Mrs. McManaway and daughter, and also Mrs. Ulrich, of Watsontown, motored from Millheim to Lock Haven last Friday.

HISTORY OF 45TH.

to Young's Point where they landed, marched to the rear of Vicksburg. If they "nearly died" digging ditches the Mississippi climate until they were able to celebrate the "Fourth" with the capture of this confederate stronghold. For some time among the swamps and marshes of the Mississippi many of the boys died or were disabled by fever until at last they were moved northward through Tennessee to the mountainlands of Kentucky.

Corporal Buckley next takes up the narrative by his recollections of campaigning in Tennessee. He gives a vivid description of the country through which they passed and their reception by the mountaineers, as well as a complete account of the engagement at Blue Spgs and their retreat from Lenoir, after which it looked for some time as if they would only get out of Tennessee "by way of Richmond." However, about the beginning of 1864 the tide turned and the Forty-Fifth reached the soil of Kentucky after Longstreet's decisive defeat.

An exact itinerary of the Tennessee campaign follows next in order, compiled by Lieutenant T. J. Davies, and this is followed by an account of an experience on a thirty days furlough accorded to over 400 men of the regiment who had enlisted for "three years of the war," written by W. A. Roberts, after which they met at Harrisburg, later went into camp at Annapolis for thirty days more. The Wilderness campaign next follows which is taken up by R. G. Rhards and Lieutenant Davies and of which we are given a very spirited description, winding up with a narrative in verse which is well worth reading.

The experiences of the Regiment from the Wilderness to Petersburg, including the battle of the Crater and the engagements at Weldon Railroad and Pelgrai's Farm, are recited by Beauge and Rhards in a manner that closely holds the reader's attention, while Chapter XI narrates the closing events, the visit of President Lincoln, the news of Lee's surrender, the grand review at Washington and the breaking up of camp for the last time.

The latter portion of the History is devoted to personal reminiscences among which we note especially those chapters devoted to the horrors of the Rebel Prisons, Libbey, Salisbury and Andersonville, in which many of the members of the Forty-Fifth died through ill treatment and disease. The book as a whole is well worth reading, is printed in good type and adds materially to our knowledge of the history of our Civil War.

Mrs. Celia A. Fraker Dead.

Mrs. Celia A. Fraker, widow of W. A. Fraker, died on Tuesday at the home of her son, J. M. Fraker, at Altoona, after an illness of ten days. She was born in Milesburg May 1, 1842, and in early life taught school there, later teaching in the Kidder seminary, at Shirleysburg, Huntingdon County. Her husband died thirty-eight years ago. She had lived in Altoona since 1880.

Frank Ingram Dead.

Frank Ingram, a native of Centre County and a son of the late George Ingram, died on Friday of last week at Derry, Pa., from acute indigestion. He was ill but a few hours. The body was brought to Unionville and interment made on Monday. Surviving the deceased are his widow and twelve children, also two brothers, Thomas and George, of near Unionville.

To Hold Big Picnic.

The seventh annual picnic of the Modern Woodmen of America, Knights of the Golden Eagle and Red Men will be held at Hunters Park on Saturday, August 10. An interesting program of amusements has been arranged. There will be a baseball game and other athletic events. Dancing in the pavilion. Special trains will be run over the Bellefonte Central, leaving State College at 8, 9 and 11.50 A. M., and returning leave the park at 6.30 P. M. Smith's orchestra, from Bellefonte, has been engaged for the day.

Deciding that the best plan was that of being on the safe side, Harry Winton is having his son undergo the Pasteur treatment at his home in Bellefonte. It will be recalled that the boy was recently bitten by large dog owned by some foreigners at the Nittany furnace. The dog was killed. The serum used in the Pasteur treatment is received from Marietta and applied by Dr. J. Coburn Rogers. The young man's condition is entirely satisfactory, the Pasteur treatment being used to guard against any emergency. The treatment covers a period of several weeks. While the wounds caused by the dog were deep and painful young Winton is recovering rapidly and will be on deck to play baseball before the season is over.

John Woodring, son of the well known passenger conductor on the Bald Eagle Valley road, was in Bellefonte this week with an invention which greatly interested owners of automobiles. The invention consists of a gelatine-like substance for filling inner tubes, taking the place of air and which is claimed to make punctures harmless and blow-outs a thing of the past. The theory of the invention is that a nail or tack which has punctured a tire may be withdrawn without leaving any opening in the inner tube, the gelatine-like substance at once filling up any break or tear in the rubber. A. G. Morris was one of the automobile owners who became interested in the proposition and yesterday the tires from his big touring car were shipped away to be treated with the non-puncture process. It is said that the cost for fixing up four wheels with the patent inner tube process is $100. Other automobilists are eagerly awaiting results once the Morris car is equipped with the new invention.

Natural Business Conditions

bring an opportunity for saving at Claster's Great August "Round-Up" Sale. This August Sale at this progressive concern is in nowise a forced occasion. These end-of-the-season sales are the natural result of business circumstances that can be almost invariably expected to come about season after season. Every up-to-date retail concern must have a stock house-cleaning at intervals, and August is an almost self-appointed period for the adjusting process. As we understand the situation, any retail store would naturally prefer to sell all of its output at full price and a regular profit. But there is scarcely any line in which this happens. In wearing apparel, especially, a number of new styles must be brought out each season by each maker—otherwise the styles would in time grow old all at once.

It will pay you handsomely to attend this sale, as you will not find values like those offered again this year. The general savings effected range from 20 to 50% off their former prices. The sale begins on Thursday, August 15th and will end Saturday, August 24th. Just nine business days to dispose of all summer merchandise at big reductions. Don't forget the date of the opening.

To Improve Phone Service.

In order to have its plant in the very best condition when the new common battery central office is opened, the Bell Telephone Company will start to work at once on new construction and re-arrangements on a great deal of its outside wire. It is expected that the new office will be opened about December 1st. According to [illegible] the company is anxious to have everything in such shape that Bellefonte will have a telephone service second to no other city of its size in the country. Much of the overhead wiring will be replaced by cable. Altogether over 12,200 feet of cable will be placed and in addition there will be about 265 feet of underground cable. The placing of the wires in cable in which from 25 to 200 or 300 wires are grouped together and sheathed in a lead coat, provides a much better and more certain service, as there is no danger of trouble from storms and wind. In addition there will be a great deal of rewiring in order to provide for the semi-selective ringing which, it is believed, will greatly please the subscribers. The total cost of this new construction will amount to over $11,000. Mr. Mallalieu stated that he expected a growth of at least 150 new subscribers as soon as the work is finished. The Bell company will follow up its other work in this vicinity with the entire rebuilding of toll line between Lewistown and Bellefonte, a distance of about 39 miles. It is stated that the reconstruction of this line will be done in order to bring it up to the standard Bell specifications, so that the best of toll service may be given. The work involves the placing of 309 new poles, and the balance of the line will be thoroughly gone over. The expenditure for this work will amount to over $6,900.

The Crops.

Bradstreet's Report says: Optimism characterizes most reports as to crops, though there are still some flaws in the advices as to corn and cotton in the southwest. Winter-wheat yields continue to turn out better than earlier expected and the southwest sends glowing advices, spring wheat holds all its promise as the harvest becomes general, and oats will be a bumper crop, with some almost fabulous threshing results reported. Kansas has a bumper crop of wheat (94,000,000 bushels,) and that state with Oklahoma and Nebraska promise an aggregate yield of 163,000,000 bushels, as against 102,000,000 bushels a year ago, a gain of 60 per cent. What is evidently a record crop of spring wheat is now being cut in the northwest, which also has a fine rye and barley yields and a good corn prospect.

There is a bare possibility that the business men's picnic for this year is not a dead issue. Will Conley, secretary of the association, has called a meeting for tonight to talk matters over.

Brought Back to Life

A Story of the Twenty-first Century

By F. A. MITCHEL

From the New York Bluster, July 30, 2001.

Near the middle of the nineteenth century an ingenious Frenchman wrote a story based on the idea that the living human body by a process of exhaustion of its moisture called desiccation could be kept as a mummy for an unlimited period and by the reintroduction of water could be reanimated. This literary production was considered by the people of that age to be very ingenious and highly imaginative. There was no pretense on the part of the author that the idea on which it was built was or ever would be possible, nor was it taken seriously by the public.

The coming of the twentieth century marked the beginning of a new scientific era. For a hundred years men had been discovering that they could talk to each other from different parts of the globe; that disease was nothing more or less than the work of infinitely small germs and hundreds of other—to them—marvelous processes of nature. These discoveries were mostly accidental. But about the year 1900 rich men began to found institutions with a view to making regular progress.

One of the most important subjects studied by these institutions has been the human body and that mysterious life process which is born with it and grows as it grows. In the year 1912 scientists began to experiment, among other things, on the animal heart and found that portions of it removed from the body and cultivated in hyptonic plasma would pulsate for several months. This changed the conditions under which the animal might be pronounced dead. It was also about this time that scientists laid down two causes of bodily death or corruption—the action of microbes and self digestion. From this scientific fact naturally followed the axiom—exclude the microbes, exhaust the water and there can be no death.

A hundred years have intervened between a knowledge of this fact and its being put in practice. That which 150 years ago was the basis of an imaginative extravaganza has today become the subject of an actual occurrence.

It appears that about the middle of the twentieth century there lived in Chicago, then a small city of not more than four or five millions of people, a meat preserver named Swartz, whose son Adrian chose, rather than follow in the footsteps of his father, to devote himself to scientific research. Being heir to a couple of billion dollars, or 2,000 wealth units—the people of that day had not been driven by vast accumulations to our present system of typifying fortunes—he was not prevented from following unremunerative tastes by poverty.

This Adrian Swartz loved a beautiful girl whose name appears on the records as Muriel Anderson. Professor Swartz worked on his own lines, in his own laboratory, keeping his investigations a profound secret. What he was doing has only come to light fifty years after he was engaged in his work. He was absorbed in two things—his investigations with a view to perpetuating the life principle and Miss Muriel Anderson.

It was then known that different parts of the body may be taken from a person who has recently been pronounced dead by the old standard and preserved in cold storage vaults for an indefinite period. The young professor was able to start on his investigations with a knowledge of this and other facts. Knowing that corruption may be kept out by excluding microbes and water, he devoted himself to the discovery of a process by which, after having kept them out, the water might be reintroduced at a later date without admitting the microbes.

That the breathing process may be suspended without producing corruption was also known to Professor Swartz, and this was a very important point. The main problem before him was not how to keep out corruption, but to restore animation.

Miss Muriel Anderson was taken ill and died. Her lover's grief was so great that for a time it was feared that he would lose his reason. There was no evidence that the body was not disposed of by burial, which was the usual method in those days. After the girl's death Swartz was observed to pursue his investigations with still more eagerness than before. Indeed, his relatives feared that he would go insane on the subject of perpetuating life.

There are traditions that a dog belonging to one of his friends died and ten years later appeared at his master's door and showed great delight at the reunion. It was whispered that the dog had been reanimated by the young professor. There was a similar story about a cat, but unscientific persons claimed there was nothing remarkable in bringing back a cat to life except for the tenth time. These matters are mentioned here to show that it was supposed Professor Swartz was reported to have achieved some success in his work.

Recently there was a commotion in the Institution For Scientific Research, located in this city. Doctors and professors have been seen to be consulting together in whispers, but despite the improved methods used by some of our enterprising reporters for magnifying the whisper waves the secret was kept. Then it was confided to one or two persons that a body that had been more than half a century ago prepared for a life perpetuating process had been discovered and removed to the institution. With it was a paper some four decades old, giving the results of experiments in reanimating bodies. A report was circulated that late discoveries completed the process laid down in the paper and might possibly render it effective.

We are enabled in this issue, owing to the enterprise of one of our reportorial staff, who used ear megaphones, X ray telescopes for looking through stone walls and other modern devices to give our readers the most remarkable achievement in science ever produced by mortal man.

In the year 1955, when the thermometer stood 30 degrees below zero Fahrenheit, there died in Chicago Muriel Anderson. The night of her burial her lover went alone to her grave, exhumed her body and removed it to his laboratory, his object being to attempt to reanimate it. He had not then perfected any process by which this could be accomplished and for the time being devoted himself to preserving the body. His method was twofold, surrounding it by chemically produced cold—250 degrees Fahrenheit—and hermetic sealing. This accomplished, the body was left in a vault under the laboratory, and the professor proceeded with his experiments for resuscitation on the lower animals.

Time passed without any results sufficiently certain to warrant the professor in risking the life of his loved one in cold storage.

Professor Swartz died without giving up his secret, but he made provision for a continuance of his work contingent upon certain happenings. Recently the ground on which his laboratory stood was sold for the purpose of erecting a 200 story skyscraper upon it. In digging for the foundations the workmen came upon a subcellar or vault fifty feet below the surface in which was a large glass mausoleum. Attached to it was a notice to look in the wall behind a metal plate. There was discovered a paper stating that the mausoleum contained the body of Muriel Anderson, supposed to have died in 1955. Then followed a statement giving the process for life preservation and the results of Professor Swartz's investigations with a view to reanimating bodies.

The find was reported to the owner of the property, and he summoned a member of the corps of investigators of the Institution For Scientific Research. The mausoleum was removed to the institution and the paper read and discussed at a meeting of its staff of investigators. It at once appeared that certain obstacles that had been in the way of Professor Swartz had been removed by recent discoveries made at the institution.

The first question discussed was whether the body would be found upon examination to have retained the germs of life for half a century, but it was agreed that this knowledge could only be gained by the right process of reanimation. That process was under discussion for several weeks with every effort to keep the secret. Finally Dr. Shuntunner, Ph. D., I. S. (investigator in science), presented a plan of procedure that captured the investigators, and it was determined to put it in practice at once.

The glass sarcophagus was found to contain water, but at a temperature of 145 degrees minus, or in the solid form. Its introduction had been intended to show that water should be introduced when resuscitation was commenced; warmth was gradually introduced and with it infinitesimal quantities of oxygen and then a little ordinary atmosphere.

The body resembled a skeleton covered with leather, but under a slow process of the introduction of air and water a slight filling out was perceptible. The latest microbe antiseptic was used, and successfully. So slow was the process that it was a week before the watchers began to perceive the slightest sign of a living organism, and even then there was no certainty concerning it.

It would be impossible for the unscientific mind to follow the various devices preventive of danger applied by the revivers. Results alone can be given. Within ten days the body had assumed some degree of roundness. There was still the pallor formerly supposed to indicate death, but now known in some cases to indicate only a suspension of the action of the heart. The first sign of life was a slight tremor, at which the resuscitators clasped one another's hands in an ecstasy of hope.

It was soon after this that the body was removed from the sarcophagus and placed in a warm bed. The region about the heart was then alternately clutched and released once in several seconds to start the action of that organ. The arms were worked to and fro to start respiration. A very small quantity of food was administered.

On the eighteenth day while the resuscitators were all present the lips moved, and the single word "Adrian" was faintly spoken.

The scientists were delighted. But their joy was soon turned to disappointment. Despite all effort and care the signs of life died away and have never returned. It is believed that when consciousness returned it brought with it the liability to mental distress, which we now know is the body's greatest enemy. This produced the reaction.

A life held in suspense for years has been temporarily restored. But what are the conditions of this suspended animation? Who knows?

The Unknown

A Mystery of a Lock of Hair

By ALEXANDER HUTCHINS

The summer was coming on, and I longed for some place away from the city where I could go after business hours to pass the night and return in the morning. On Saturdays we closed at noon, which gave me forty-five hours or thereabout before I would have to get back to business. After consulting with friends I chose Afton, a seacoast town, where there were a few summer cottages belonging to city people, some hotels and boarding houses. I engaged a room on the top story of a hotel where from my window I could look out upon the ocean.

It was certainly delicious, having left the city on a hot afternoon, to enter my room, see far and near the great stretch of undulating water and smell the odor of the sea. The first thing I did was to put on my bathing suit, go down to the water and take a plunge.

I went to Afton on the 1st of July when there were few persons there, but by the middle of the month the place was well filled with strangers, among whom young girls and young men not yet engaged in their life pursuits predominated. I presume there were at least fifty maidens of a marriageable age, some of them comely, some intellectual and some both comely and intellectual. The bathing hour followed the tide, and some days I got away from the city sufficiently early to bathe with the crowd. These days were delightful, especially as I jumped, as it were, from the hot cobblestones of the city into the cool waves of the sea.

One evening about the 1st of August, when the season was well on, reaching my hotel after my ride from the city, the clerk handed me several letters, which I took up to my room without inspecting, for I was in a hurry for my bath. On my return from the beach while smoking a cigarette in my bath robe before the window I took up my mail. One envelope was addressed to me in a feminine hand that I did not recognize. Tearing it open, I uncovered a bit of cardboard, on which was pinned a lock of hair.

It required some time for me to get at the probable bottom of this missive, but at last I fathomed it in this wise. Some girl had seen me and, having been attracted by my appearance, had discovered my name and my hotel and had sent me this lock of her hair. Just what her object was could also only be guessed. Possibly she didn't know herself.

I fancied the girl was most likely staying in Afton. It was probable that I had no acquaintance with her. If I had her act would show a lack of maidenly modesty, for by placing the lock sent me beside her hair I could easily discover her identity. Nevertheless there was a possibility of my tracking her by this lock. She was a blond, but the shade was not uncommon. There might be a dozen girls at the place whose hair it would match reasonably well.

Knowing that I would be observed by one and possibly a number of girls, I determined not to betray my interest in the matter by a critical examination of the hair of different young ladies. So when I appeared with the throng on the beach or in the water or on the board walk, though I kept my eyes open, I did not let it appear that I was looking for the lady who had sent me the lock.

I have always been one of those fellows who make acquaintances slowly and have never relished pushing myself forward. One day one of the young men staying at my hotel approached me, opened conversation and in due time asked me if I would not like to know some of the young ladies. I gladly assented, and the next day on the beach he introduced me to a girl who made me feel at home in her company at once. This to a retiring man is a great deal. I regretted that she could not be the one who had sent me the lock, for her hair was a beautiful shade of red.

Miss Rebecca Yardley—that was her name—was an expert swimmer, and we used to bathe together constantly. A raft was anchored out in deep water, to which we would go for diving purposes. Often she would discard the skirt, which I have always considered not only useless to women swimmers, but a drawback. Her figure was perfect, and in this skirtless costume she was a model for a statue, while in the sunlight her hair took on a deep shade of gold. My amphibious companionship with her rendered my stay at Afton very different from what it had been before I met her.

I noticed that, although the young man who had introduced me to her had asked me if I would like to know some of the girls, he did not further pursue his introductions. Whether this was because he saw that I appeared quite content with her acquaintance or for some other reason I don't know. I soon became sufficiently intimate with Miss Yardley to confide to her under her promise of secrecy that I had received an anonymous lock of hair, whereupon she said that we men did not know the number of girls who would lay traps for us and it behooved us to be on our guard. I asked her if she thought some young woman was desirous simply of providing herself with a husband, to which she replied that it was more probable the sender of the lock had seen me and my personality had especially appealed to her.

Though this supposition flattered my vanity, I was a bit disappointed, for it seemed to me that if Miss Yardley had desired to keep me for herself she would not have given me a reply that would tend to influence me favorably toward the unknown. However, her warning against designing girls and her intimating that the unknown probably had sent me the lock of her hair because she admired me neutralized each other.

One afternoon I reached Afton from the city at the time the tide was favorable for bathing, and as soon as I could get into my bathing suit I went down to join the crowd in the water. The wind was off the ocean and the surf high. As I approached the beach I saw a commotion among those standing about, most of them peering out on the water. There I saw that the interest was centered upon some one beyond the ropes. The bathing master instead of plunging in was trying to get a boat through the breakers, but without success.

I ran as fast as I could to the verge and, bounding over the crests of the first few waves, went under the next and then, with a hand over hand stroke, by which I could swim the fastest, made for the person who needed assistance. I soon saw that it was a woman, and as I drew near by the reddish tint on her head knew that it was Miss Yardley. On reaching her I held her up until the bathing master came with the boat, and he pulled us to shore.

She was quite exhausted, but not so much so as to forget to ask me to pick up her bathing cap, which had fallen off. She took it from me and put it on, though I could not see why, because her hair was soaked.

On account of this incident I naturally found favor with Miss Yardley, though I think had I not been there she still would have been saved. One thing I did not fancy. I feared this intimacy would cause my unknown to avoid giving me any clew to her identity. I was satisfied with Miss Yardley's companionship, but I did not like the idea of giving up my romance. And between romance and reality romance will win every time. From words I let drop to my known charmer she inferred that my mind was on her unknown rival. Instead of endeavoring to banish her from my mind Miss Yardley joined me in observing the girls whose hair fulfilled the condition that would prove her the owner of the lock. Were we perambulating the board walk or on the beach or the piazza of her hotel, she would on the approach of a blond girl ask me if her hair was not the shade of the lock I had received. Most of them were quite like it, but their number spoiled the clew.

While romance is more effective than reality flesh and blood are more effective than fancy. I was constantly with my known and never with my unknown. The consequence was that the former had a great advantage. At any rate, as the end of August drew near my constant dawdling of evenings with Miss Yardley tended to obliterate my unknown from my mind. One night—the night before Miss Yardley was to leave for home—sitting on a protruding rock, the waves rolling in beside us, strains of music and laughter coming from the hotel back of us, I forgot the girl with the lock of blond hair and asked her rival to be my wife.

We parted the next day, engaged, she to go to her home in one city, I to another. The autumn season was always a busy one to me, and there was no probability of my seeing her again till midwinter. We arranged, however, that I should join her for the holidays. Meanwhile we were to correspond.

The ink spilled during that interval was enormous. My fiancee often asked me if I had heard anything about my unknown and if I did not still cherish tender thoughts of her. I replied that the only thing that remained of that romance was the lock of hair. Upon this my love wrote me to save it for her. She had a fancy to keep it. I promised that I would bring it to her when I joined her in December.

All waits have an end, and the time came when I threw aside the cares of business and took a train to rejoin Miss Yardley. When I saw her on the evening of my arrival in her drawing room I met with the surprise of my life. I saw the same girl had parted with a few months at the seashore, all except the hair. Hers was no longer red, but blond.

Instead of advancing to clasp her in my arms I stood gaping at her, while she remained, head bent, blushing, but with an amused smile on her lips. As I looked a light was breaking in on my dull brain.

"You are my unknown!" I exclaimed.

There was no reply. In another moment I had folded her in my arms.

Her confession came later. The moment she first saw me she realized instinctively that she wished me, and me alone. To start a romance she had sent me a lock of her hair; but, frightened at what she had done, she dyed her own. The introduction I had received was at her own request. When we had got her into the boat at the time she came near drowning her first thought was that the salt water might remove the dye, and she had snatched her bathing cap from me to prevent my seeing the real color of her hair. But dye is not so easily removed. For over three months her hair had been growing to its natural color, though its ends still retained some of the red.

"Well," I said after listening to this confession, "the devices of women are a wonder to us men."

The Skeleton In the Closet.

It is said that the expression "There is a skeleton in every closet" arose from the following incident: A young Italian student, finding he was dying, fearing to break the news to his mother, adopted the following device: He informed her that he was ill and that it had been foretold he would not recover until he had worn a shirt made by a woman who had no trouble. The widow soon discovered it was no easy task to find such a person, but at length was referred to a lady who seemed surrounded with every comfort and happiness and possessed a husband who seemed devoted to her. The widow made known her request and for an answer was shown a closet where a skeleton hung suspended from a beam. She was told it was the remains of the lady's former lover, who from motives of jealousy had been slain by her husband, and that he compelled her to visit it every day. The widow concluded that no one was without trouble, that "there is a skeleton in every closet," and became reconciled to the approaching loss of her son.

A Frightful Shock.

The president of the university had dark circles under his eyes. His cheek was pallid, his lips were trembling, he wore a hunted expression. Every now and then he turned and glanced apprehensively behind him.

"You look ill," said his wife. "What is wrong, dear?"

"Nothing much," he replied. "But—I—I had a fearful dream last night, and I feel this morning as if I—as if I"— He hesitated and stammered. It was evident that his nervous system was shattered.

"What was the dream?" asked his wife.

"I—I dreamed the trustees required that—that I should—that I should pass the freshman examination for—admission!" sighed the president.—Youth's Companion.

Old London's Free Dinners.

Two hundred years ago visitors to London who knew the ropes could enjoy free dinners as well as free shows. The author of "Le Guide des Etrangers a Londres," published in 1710, writes: "Let us suppose you are in the Royal Exchange and feel that you would like to dine sumptuously without opening your purse. Take a coach or a wherry to Lambeth and call on his grace the archbishop of Canterbury, who keeps an open table on Saturdays and always welcomes foreigners and more especially men of letters. You should arrive at Lambeth palace not later than noon and introduce yourself to one of the chaplains, who will present you to his grace. The lord mayor also frequently keeps open house for visitors in the same way."

Book of Short Stories.

To read a dictionary twice through for pleasure, as Lord Chatham did, is not a tempting suggestion. But there is a hint in Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff's diary of 1877, when he was doing a good deal of train traveling on the continent. "In these last days I have been exceedingly amused by Brachet's 'Etymological Dictionary,' which Henry Smith recommended to me when I was in Oxford the other day and which is a perpetual succession of pleasant surprises.

"It is an admirable railway book for one who can only read at the stations. As the lord said who dipped into the dictionary while waiting for Sir Walter Scott, 'the dictionary stories are "unco short."'"—London Chronicle.

Both Saw the Monkey.

"I had a most terrible experience today," declared the pretty girl to her boarding house companions. "I was walking along the street when suddenly I heard a most peculiar noise. I looked up, and there on a stoop stood a most hideous monkey leering at me. It startled me, and I stepped back quickly, putting my hand to my eyes. Then the man who was coming just behind me remarked:

"'You're all right, little girl. I see it, too, and I've been on the water cart for weeks.' Now, what do you suppose he meant?"

The men boarders who were at the table answered not, but the wife of one of them explained to the girl later on.

The Fog Lady

She Came to the Rescue

By CLARISSA MACKIE

It had been a warm May day without a breath of wind to stir the young green leaves on the elms and maples that bordered the village streets.

Late in the afternoon there stole over hill and harbor a faint bluish haze that some said was smoke from distant forest fires. The weatherwise predicted a "May fog."

"Going out, doc?" asked old Simon Way, the boat builder, as the young physician passed him on the little wharf.

"Yes, Simon, I'm going out for a breath of fresh air, if there's any out there. It's deuced hot ashore."

"Ye won't find any wind outside today," predicted Simon, with an eye toward the channel. "I been out there all day and came back with the tide. It's hot as thunder out there, and it'll be worse before ye get back."

"You think we'll have a squall?" The doctor hesitated at the top of the steps that led down to the water where his dory was fastened. His speedy little motorboat was anchored not far away.

"Worse than a squall for getting around in."

"What's that?"

"A fog."

"I shall be back before it shuts down." The doctor straightened his shoulders and took a deep breath.

"Ye feel shut in between these high bluffs?" asked Simon curiously.

"Yes, but under the right conditions I would not—there are certain things that might change it all—bring its own breath of paradise with it."

Simon Way went home and told his wife that he guessed Dr. Morton was getting tired of Bell Harbor, in spite of the splendid practice he had acquired. Mrs. Way threw a shawl over her head and ran across the street to tell Mrs. Clarence Sayles and that lady delivered the information in an abbreviated form to the effect that Dr. Morton was going to leave town.

Cleo Adams heard the news just as she sat down to the supper table.

In the meantime Dr. Morton's launch had chugged out of Bell Harbor into the sound. The white bow cut the placid water and broke up the rose-colored reflections into rippling waves of rose and silver flecked foams.

All about him was a wall of fog, now shot with a queer pinkish glow. As he shut off the power, and the engine ceased throbbing he listened for some sound to break the silence that was upon the waters.

"This will be a good place to think it over," he said to himself and then realized that he had expressed the craving of his heart—ever since Cleo Adams had laughed at his offer of marriage.

He stared unseeingly into the fog, his thoughts revolving around that episode of last night.

Dr. Morton had wooed Cleo Adams in the shy way that is characteristic of many men of his profession, and when the time came when he could no longer withhold his confession of love, he had done an unusual thing.

It was 9 o'clock the previous evening when he had entered his little office and sank wearily into a chair before his desk. His housekeeper had left a supper for him and gone to prayer meeting. The house was quiet.

Suddenly he picked up the telephone receiver and held it to his ear as he called Cleo's number. He felt very cool and professional as he waited for a reply from the Adams home.

It came at last in Cleo's low, clear voice:

"Yes?" she inquired.

"Is this Miss Cleo?" asked the doctor calmly.

"This is Miss Adams," she replied to his satisfaction.

"Cleo," he almost whispered, fighting back the shyness that almost choked his utterance of the important words—"Cleo, I love you, dear; could you marry me?"

Then had come an instant's hesitation. He was prepared for that, but her light, stinging laugh was a stunning surprise to him. "No, thank you!" she had said airily and hung up the receiver with a little defiant clatter.

Dr. Morton sat in his chair, motionless and white, until his scandalized housekeeper had arisen from her bed and come downstairs to inform him that it was past 2 o'clock. Thereupon he had shaken himself together and retired, only to spend a sleepless night before he arose to fulfill the duties of another day's dull routine.

Now he had left it all behind. In the solitude afforded by the fog he would battle with his trouble and master it.

But he did not reckon with the fog.

While he sat there thinking bitter thoughts about Cleo Adams, who now appeared to be shallow and heartless when once he had believed her to be earnest, sincere and far above coquetry in any of its forms, his boat was drifting idly with the tide. Little by little he was floating away from the shore, and not until he heard the blast of the foghorn of the shoals lighthouse did he realize his position. At once he started the engine and turned toward Bell Harbor.

It was growing dark now, and the fog clung moistly to his face and hands and every shred of his garments. It entered his throat and almost strangled him, so raw and penetrating was it.

Something dark loomed before him, and at the same instant a fog bell tolled close at hand.

A big sound steamer rushed past him, a menacing death from which he had barely escaped.

The foghorn he had first heard had not been the shoals light. It was the steamer bearing down upon him.

Where had he drifted? He could not tell, except that it must be in the path of the eastward bound steamers.

He resolved to steer in the direction where he believed Bell Harbor to be. He would go very slowly and cautiously, and when he drew near enough to Bell Harbor breakwater he could see the pale glow of its sentinel lantern and thus find his way through the tortuous channel into the harbor.

But the doctor was an amateur. The launch was a new diversion and a plaything to him, and because he was a more skillful physician than he was a navigator he chugged helplessly around for two hours before he admitted that he was lost in the fog.

Another hour passed in fruitless going to and fro. He had heard the blare of the shoals light foghorn, but his ignorance of the waters about here made it impossible for him to calculate distances or directions. He laughed rather scornfully at his foolish hopes when he had bought the motorboat. Cleo Adams was an ardent sailor, and he had planned many delightful trips in the boat which as yet had no name. He wanted to call it after her.

The doctor was now prepared to spend the night on the sound. He had not heard anything that might indicate the presence of other craft in his neighborhood. He concluded that all other boats must be anchored, waiting for the fog to lift. Of course he did not dare to enter the cabin of the launch and sleep.

Just then a strange sound, odd enough heard there in the fog at 10 o'clock in the evening, smote upon his strained ears.

It was the voice of a woman singing. The sweet tones came tremulously across the water, and involuntarily the doctor turned his craft and headed in the direction of the voice.

To his delight it grew louder and clearer as he went on this course, and now he could distinguish the words of the hymn:

"Pull for the shore, sailor, pull for the shore"

"It sounds as if it was meant for me," he muttered, bending his head to peer through the fog for the first glimpse of the mysterious singer.

Guided by the voice of the singer, who rendered verse after verse of the stirring song with tireless patience now that the first tremolo had been overcome, Dr. Morton drew nearer to the sound until a peculiar orange glow indicated the nearness of a light.

Could it be the entrance to Bell Harbor channel? If so, who was that singing there on the black rocks of the breakwater?

He held to his course with the light on his left and, to his delight, left it behind. He was entering the channel and would soon be inside Bell Harbor.

The voice suddenly stopped and then spoke in tones vaguely familiar to him—perhaps the fog disguised it.

"Boat ahoy!" it called.

"Here!" returned Morton quickly.

"Is that Dr. Morton?"

"Yes. Can I take you off? Am I needed?"

"Come carefully—follow my voice—there!" as the boat jarred against a large rock. "Steady a moment!"

A pale form moved out of the fog and without effort entered his boat, shoving off from the rock before it groped to a seat beside him.

"If you will give me the wheel I can steer you directly to the wharf," said the voice of Cleo Adams calmly, and without a word the astonished physician gave the wheel into her hands and slid along the seat to make room for her.

"How came you there?" he asked curiously, after he had related the details of his being lost in the fog and how her singing had guided him safely to port.

Her voice trembled slightly: "Simon Way told father you had gone out in the fog against his advice and that you had not returned. Father worried because his lameness prevented him from coming to your rescue. I said nothing to them, but came out in my boat to look for you. It sprang a leak, and I abandoned it and climbed on the rocks. I was sure you could hear my voice and would find the way back." She spoke practically and, except for the tremble in her voice, appeared quite unmoved by the heroism of her deed.

"You came out here to save my life?" he asked hoarsely.

"You saved my father's life last winter," she retorted, adding, "You are such a good doctor that we cannot afford to lose you, although I hear you are going away."

"After last night you could hardly profess to care," he said bitterly.

"Last night? I did not see you last night. In fact, I was in Cloverton. They had sickness in Uncle Joe's family," said Cleo.

"Then who talked with me over your telephone?" he asked quickly.

"It must have been Stella Morris. She was to remain with father and mother all night. What did she say? She is such a giddy, thoughtless girl"—Cleo faltered into silence as his words tumbled forth breathlessly in explanation.

"What would you have said?" he demanded.

"Yes," whispered Cleo as their faces touched.

When they named the doctor's motorboat they called her the Fog Lady, and nobody knew save Dr. Morton and his wife just what it meant.

A sudden attack of appendicitis in an acute form was suffered last Saturday by Miss Elizabeth Morris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Morris. She had planned departing on the afternoon train that day for Canada where she was to be a guest at a house party. She had her trunk already packed and was looking forward with delightful anticipation to a trip that was to cover a period of several weeks. On Saturday morning she became ill and the attending physician fearing that the cause was appendicitis called in a second physician for consultation. Her immediate removal to the hospital was ordered and late Saturday afternoon an operation was performed. It was fortunate that her departure for Canade had been delayed, the operation revealing a condition that might have resulted fatally before she could have reached her destination. To her host of friends it is gratifying to know that she is recovering nicely.

WILL FLUSH STREETS

Civic Club Wins Council by Offering to Purchase Special Nozzle.

Now that Bellefonte has a number of well paved streets the next step—that of keeping them clean—is up to the borough authorities. Progress in the line of cleanliness for the streets was accomplished at Monday night's meeting of the borough Council. Misses Elizabeth Blanchard, Mary Meek and Emma Aiken, appearing on behalf of the Civic Club, proposed that the club purchase a street flushing nozzle for fire hose and that the borough see to it that the several paved streets are flushed once a week. The cost of the nozzle is about $16. Council voted to accept the proposition. It is probable that Saturday night of each week will be selected for flushing the streets, thus making them more presentable on Sunday.

Not for a long time has Council had so many matters on the schedule as turned up at Monday night's meeting. By a vote of 4 to 2 Council voted to have the borough furnish the lights at two poles recently erected by citizens in West High Street, one pole in front of the Bush House and the other on the opposite side of the street. Word was received from the Bell Telephone Company that the huge pole in front of the Potter—Hoy Hardware Co., store would be removed by August 31, also that the two unsightly poles in front of the Bush House would be taken away by January 15, next. In consideration of this Council voted to extend the time recently given the company in which to remove all three poles. This time limit was originally thirty days.

A suit in court may be the outcome of Council's determination to have the splash boards removed from the Spring creek dam, at the Bellefonte Steam Laundry. Mr. Gamble, of Gamble, Gheen & Co., owners of the mill race leading from Spring creek above the dam, appeared before Council in regard to the matter. He was accompanied by C. T. Gerberich, one of the former owners of the mill race and who said he was familiar with conditions surrounding the dam covering a period of forty years. The substance of Mr. Gerberich's remarks was that in 1883 the late Dr. Hale rebuilt the original dam and had the new breastwork built slightly lower than the old one. Council's records show that in 1894 temporary permission was granted the firm of Gerberich, Hale & Co., then owners of the mill race, to erect a four-inch splash board at the dam, this to be done with the understanding that the same should be removed at the pleasure of Council.

Mr. Gamble stated that he would insist on his rights in the matter. He did not concede that the borough had any right to remove the splash board. He said that the removal of the splash board would not reduce the volume of water flowing into his race because he would at once meet the change in water height at the dam by a corresponding increase in depth in his race. Council finally voted that Mr. Gamble be notified to remove the splash board within thirty days. The assumption is that he will not comply and at the expiration of thirty days the borough will remove the splash board and that legal proceedings will then develop.

Council voted to pay $500 to R. B. Taylor for paving and curbing in West High Street, still leaving an unpaid balance of $173.49. This was held off the bill until some few corrections are made in the work. Council ordered the fire escape and roof of the pumping station at the Phoenix mill repainted. A new street crossing is badly needed in Spring Street, between the Garman estate and the Dr. Dale properties. Mr. Daggett suggested that the borough pave the square at the intersection of High and Spring Streets, but this was boo-hooed out of all consideration on the ground that the borough was too hard up. The Street Committee was directed to investigate and report on a request from citizens of that community for the laying of a crossing from Thomas Street to the railroad crossing at the Gamble, Gheen & Co. mill. In the request for this improvement it was pointed out that such a crossing would not only be a convenience but a safeguard for children traveling that road on their way to school. It was voted to order the owners to lay new sidewalks at the R. B. Taylor property in Lamb Street, the J. I. McClure property in Bishop Street, and the Garman estate property at the corner of High and Spring Streets.

Clarence Harper submitted to Council an aluminum coated iron "Danger, Run Slow" street sign, explaining that the signs sold for $2, each. He called attention to the point that under the Pennsylvania automobile law automobilists cannot be fined for speeding unless proper signs are displayed. Council subsequently considered the matter in a desultory sort of way, only to drop it when one member started to figure out about how many of the signs would be required.

Having devoted almost two hours to other matters, Council next took up the question of finances. A note for $8000 at three months was ordered to lift a note for a like amount and which expired August 6th. Another note, this one for $5000, was ordered drawn to lift a note for $3000 and provide sufficient funds to take up a bond for $1000 and pay current bills.
